RELIGION

also Christianity, Creeds, Superstition and Religion, Theology

I—Religion Definitions

The efficacy of religion lies precisely in what not rational, philosophic, nor eternal, efficacy lies the unforeseen, the miraculous, the extraordinary Thus religion attracts more devotion according it demands more faith —that to say it becomes incredible to the profane mind The philosopher aspires to explain away all mysteries to dissolve them into light Mystery on the other hand demanded and pursued by the religious instinct, mystery constitutes the essence of worship

AMIEL, Journal, 5 June, 1870

Methinks there be not impossibilities enough in Religion for an active faith

Religion—that of the deepest human experience

MATTHEW ARNOLD, Culture and Anarchy
Sweetness and Light

The true religion is built upon the rock, tossed upon the waves of time BACON, Essays Of Vanititude of Things

A religion is jealous variety learning, discourse, opinions, and sects, misdoubting may shake the foundations, that cherisheth devotion upon simplicity and ignorance, as ascrib-ing ordinary effects to immediate working of God, is adverse to knowledge cloud capped mountain is a holy altar, An organ breathes in every grove,

 And the full heart's a Psalter, Rich in deep hymns of gratitude and love
 THOMAS HOOD, Ode to Ras Wilson, l

It is well said, in every sense that a man's religion is the chief fact with regard to him

By religion I do not mean here the church creed which he professes This is not what I call religion but the thing a does practically believe, the thing man does practically lay to heart, and know for certain, concerning his vital relations to this mysterious Universe, and his duty and destiny there, that is his religion

CARLYLE, Heroes and Hero Worship

Know thyself. (Γνῶθι σεαυτόν.)

THALES. (DIOGENES LAERTIUS, Thales, Sec. 40.) Diogenes Laertius [says] that this belongs to Thales, one of the seven wise men of Greece, although Antisthenes, in Successions of Philosophers, attributes it to Phemonoe, [and] others to Chilon and Solon. It was the first of the three maxims [of the Seven Sages]—Temple of Apollo at Delphi. The others—"Nothing too much" (Μηδὲν ἄγαν), and "Give [modesty], and trouble [thy] hand" (Ἐγγύα, τάχα δ' ἔργα).

I [say]—"know thyself," which is still preserved on a column at Delphi. (Commendo γνῶθι σεαυτόν, nosce te, Quod in columna jam Delphica.)

CICERO. (AUSONIUS, Septem Sapientum, l. 138.)

THE irksome toil produces [an] excellent fruit—to distinguish what you can endure and what you cannot; by night [at] day [you] examine [what] you are doing, [what] you have done, down to the smallest atom. All virtues—self-respect, honor, fortitude—lie in this.

AUSONIUS, Ludus Septem Sapientum, l. 140.

The ancients gave [us] the injunction, "Know thyself." (Διὰ τοῦτο παρηγγέλλον ἐὶ τελευτῇ τὸ Γνῶθι σεαυτόν.)

EPICURUS, Discourses, Bk. i, ch. 18, sec. 18.

Know thyself. (Nosce te.)

CICERO, Tusculanorum Disputationum, [Bk.] i, ch. 22, sec. 52. The commonly used form of the proverb. The full quotation is: Cum igitur Nosce te, dicit, hoc dicit: Nosce optimum ipsum, "When then Apollo says, 'Know thyself,' he says, 'Know thy soul.'" (BURTON, Anatomy of Melancholy, ii, 3, 8.)

From heaven descended the precept, "Know thyself." (Ex celo descendit γνῶθι σεαυτόν.)

JUVENAL, Satires, No. xi, l. 27. It should [be] noted that σεαυτόν is a contraction of σεαυτόν, and that sometimes [it] is used and sometimes the other. Originally the word was separated, as in Homer, who always writes, ἐὶ σεαυτόν.

The saying, "Know thyself," is silly. It [is] [not] practical to say, "Know other folks." (Γνῶθι τοὺς ἄλλους.)

MENANDER, Thrasyleon: Fragment.

If [you] "Know thyself" (Γνῶθι σεαυτόν) [is] the oracle were an easy thing for every man, it would [be] [a] [divine] injunction.

PLUTARCH, Lives: Demosthenes, Ch. 3, [Sec.] 2. Γνῶθι σεαυτόν!—and [it] [is] [the] prime And heaven-sprung adage of [all] olden time! . . . [of] [the] worm,—life, death, soul, clod—Ignore thyself, and strive [to] know thy God!

[T. COLERIDGE, Self-Knowledge.]

Well said the wisdom of earth, O mortal, know thyself; [it] [is] [better] the wisdom of heaven, O man, learn thou thy God.

CORNELIUS MUYTS, Solitude (1566)

I praise the Frenchman, [] remark [] shrewd—

'How sweet, how passing sweet [] solitude!'

[] grant me [] a friend in my retreat,

Whom I [] whisper—Solitude [] sweet

LOWPER, Retirement, l 739 The quotation has been attributed to LA BRUYÈRE

2 Hail mildly pleasing Solitude,

Companion of the [] and good,

But from whose holy piercing eye

The herd of fools and villains fly

Oh! how I love with thee to walk,

And listen to thy whispered talk,

Which [] and truth imparts,

And melts the most obdurate hearts

JAMES THOMSON, Hymn [] Solitude, l 1

I will arise and [] now, and [] to Innisfree,

And [] small cabin build there, of clay and watties made

Nine bean rows will I have there, a hve for [] honey bee,

And live alone in the bee loud glide

W B YEATS, The Lake Isle of Innisfree

3 O sacred solitude! divine retreat!

Choice of the prudent! envy of the great,

By thy pure stream, [] in thy waving shade,

We court fair wisdom, that celestial maid

YOUNG, Love of Fame Satire v, l 234

III—Solitude. Its Faults

4 Solitude affects [] people like wine, they must not take too much of it, for it flies to the head

Adam, to meet the devil in private

POPE, Thoughts [] Various Subjects

IV—Solitude and the Crowd

11 Little do [] perceive what solitude is, and how far it extendeth For [] crowd is not company, and faces [] but a gallery of pictures, and talk but [] tinkling cymbal, where there

[] love

SIR FRANCIS BACON, Essays Of Friendship

But midst the crowd, the hum, the shock of men,

To hear, to see, to feel, and to possess,

And [] along, the world a tired denizen,

With none who bless us, [] whom [] bless,

This is to be alone, thr, this [] solitude!

BYRON, Childe Harold Canto ii, st []

Among them, but not of them

BYRON, Childe Harold Canto iii, st 113

 The speaking in perpetual hyperbole is comely in nothing but in love FRANCIS BACON, Essays Of Love

Every man, who can speak at all, can speak elegantly and correctly if he pleases by attending to the best authors and orators, and indeed, I would advise those who do not speak elegantly, not to speak at all, for I am sure they will get more by their silence than by their speech

I—Writing: Definitions

Writing is not literature unless it gives the reader a pleasure which is not only from the things said, but from the way in which they are said

STOFFORD A BROOKE, Primer of English Literature

That writer does the most, who gives his reader the most knowledge, and takes from him the least time

C C COLTON, Lacon Preface

Certainly the Age of Writing is the most miraculous of all things man has devised

CARLYLE, On Heroes and Hero-Worship The Hero as Man of Letters

With the art of Writing, of which Printing is a sample, an inevitable and comparatively insignificant corollary, the true reign of miracles for mankind commenced

CARLYLE, On Heroes and Hero Worship The Hero as Man of Letters

Miscellanists are the most popular writers among every people, for it is they who form a communication between the learned and the unlearned and it were, throw a bridge between those two great divisions of the public

ISAAC D'ISRAELI, Literary Character of Men of Genius Miscellanists

There are two things which I am confident I do very well one is an introduction to any literary work, stating what it is to contain, and how it should be executed in the most perfect manner

SAMUEL JOHNSON (BOSWELL, Life, 1775)

All writing comes by the grace of God

EMERSON, Essays, Second Series Experience

No man can write anything who does not that which writes is, for time, the history of the world

EMERSON, Essays, Second Series Nature

The nobler the or sentiment, the less reports the question of authorship

EMERSON, Letters and Social Aims Quotation and Originality

great have written proudly, nor cared to explain They knew that the intelligent reader would come last, and would them

EMERSON, Natural History of Intellect Thoughts on Modern Literature

Composition is, for the most part, an effort of slow diligence and steady perseverance, to which the mind is dragged by necessity resolution

SAMUEL JOHNSON, The Adventurer No 138

To write and to live very different Many who praise virtue do no more than praise it

JOHNSON, Works Vol iii, p (Hawkins, ed)

If the works of the great poets teach anything, it is to hold mere invention somewhat cheap It is not the finding of a thing, but the making something out of it after it is found, that is of consequence

J LOWELL, My Study Windows Chaucer

The art of the pen is to rouse the inward vision That is why the poets who spring imagination with a word or a phrase, paint lasting pictures

GEORGE MEREDITH, Diana of the Crossways Ch 15

II—Writing: Apophthegms

With pen and with pencil we're learning to say

Nothing, cleverly, every day

WILLIAM ALLINGHAM, Blackberries

The reason why so few good books are written, is that so few people who write know anything

RACINE, Literary Shakespeare

The very dust of whose writings is gold

RICHARD BENTLEY, On Phalaris Referring Bishop Pearson

And tell prose writers, stories are stale,
That penny ballads have a better sale

NICHOLAS BRETON, Pasquel (1600)
